DRJ & ICOR Announce Partnership

Disaster Recovery Journal is pleased to announce a partnership with ICOR, the International Consortium of Organizational Resilience. ICOR is a respected and knowledgeable group offering not only BCM education and certification but many other educational opportunities as well. The focus is unique in that it targets resilience and the 10 disciplines that support resilience.

Disaster Recovery Journal also congratulates ICOR on its ANSI accreditation. ICOR's Certificate Program is the only ANSI accredited education program in the business continuity & crisis management marketplace.

"We are excited to partner with a group as respectable and knowledgeable as ICOR," said Bob Arnold, DRJ president. "With our magazine and our conferences, we will be able to reach a variety of planners in the industry and help spread the word about ICOR's excellent offerings. Our attendees and readers will benefit from the training and certification options they can now receive through ICOR."

"ICOR is honored to be a partner with DRJ," said Jim Nelson, Chair of the Board of ICOR. "I have attended the DRJ conferences since the first one in 1989 and have continued to support DRJ as an attendee and more recently as an exhibitor with ICOR. ICOR has also been privileged to offer courses after the DRJ conferences as well. We believe this partnership will be a benefit to both organizations."
